A note about our tuition rates:

In March 2011, the federal government stopped funding the National Writing Project, including the Eastern Michigan Writing Project (EMWP). Since its inception, Inkstains has been funded through the EMWP. As a result of this total loss of funding, we have had to increase the cost of camp tuition the past couple of years. We share in your disappointment over these higher costs, and we continue to actively pursue both the restoration of federal funds and other revenue sources.

Why A Writer's Camp?

"Most of the basic material a writer works with is acquired before the age of fifteen." —Willia Cather

- Writing camp is 9 a.m., awakening, inspired by the bustle-hustle of the Eastern Michigan University campus, watching, thinking, composing, being.
- It's walking across campus, writer's notebook in one hand, pen in the other, the writer's eye seeking stories in tattered backpacks, crows, squirrels, and new faces; connecting lives and memories, building stories in a twenty-minute stroll.

- It's paddling an imaginary raft down the whitest water that the mind can conjure, big rapids, hydraulic slips and holes, dreaming adventure scenes for the stories of tomorrow.
- Writing camp is bringing out the hip hop rhythms, the beat, the rhyme, the hook, and the tale, laughing and crying at the same time. It's what poetry was meant to do.
- It's surprising yourself with ideas, opinions, and the power of words.

"A writer lives, at best, in a state of astonishment. Beneath any feeling he has of the good or evil of the world lies a deeper one of wonder at it all." — William Sansom
